ABOUT THIS RESOURCE

Eighteenth Century Collections Online (ECCO) is a vast eighteenth-century library at your desktop—a fully text-searchable corpus of books, pamphlets and broadsides in all subjects printed between 1701 and 1800. It currently contains over 180,000 titles amounting to over 32 million fully-searchable pages.*

ECCO is a digitization of the eighteenth-century section of the works catalogued in the English Short-title Catalogue (ESTC). The ESTC project has been recording all works published or printed in Britain, Ireland, territories under British colonial rule, and the United States. It also catalogues material printed elsewhere which contains significant text in...

INTRODUCTION: THE ESTC PROJECT

The Enlightenment in England has its roots in a theory about man, society, education, and aspirations on the one hand, and a very practical activity, printing, on the other. Ideas, and their absorption into the fabric of society at every level, depend upon communication. The urgent need to build a more broadly-based economic, political, social, and educational basis for society after the sectarian crises of the seventeenth century was well understood by the leading thinkers of the period between the death of James II and the accession of Anne.

The first crucial step in the process of ensuring the transition to the newer thinking, and the profound changes in social structure it would bring about, was the liberation of the press from the stranglehold which London, and the Stationers' Company, had exerted on who could print, and where.

In 1695 printing in England was permitted only in London, the two university towns and York. By the middle of the eighteenth century it had spread to every county, and by the end of the century is documented in over a thousand towns and villages.

The part that the printing press played in the shaping of all those features of English civilization which led to colonial expansion and the Empire has never been fully explained. Nor could it have been, until the sources were identified, described, and made available through the ESTC project.

PUBLICATION HISTORY AND TITLE SELECTION POLICY

1976: The Eighteenth Century Short Title Catalogue (the original 'ESTC') starts with a conference jointly sponsored by the American Society for Eighteenth Century Studies and the British Library. The aim of the project was to create a machine-readable union catalogue of books, pamphlets and other ephemeral material printed in English-speaking countries from 1701 to 1800.

1977: The British Library starts to re-catalogue its C18th book holdings, a project which has gradually
